Ashley's Lost Scotch Collection

Like all businesses, over the years
Scotch distilleries do close.

The global recession of the early 80's was particularly devastating to the Scotch whiskey industry with many closures. Also, as beverage companies have merged and gotten bigger they have closed older facilities with greater operating expenses regardless of the quality of the product. Lowland Scotches in particular fell out of favor with blenders and most were closed in the early 80's. This was before the current growth in single malts and few had distillery bottlings. It is rare to find any of these Scotches today and even rarer still to find a distillery bottling. With every cask of Rosebank or Banff that gets bottled, potential new bottlings from silent distilleries become rarer - and therefore more expensive. Ashley's has scoured sources all over the State to find these lost bottles of Scotch.

When they are gone they are gone.

Caperdonich (Signatory) 18yr.

Speyside, Distilled 1994, bottled 2012, 16%. Matured in a Hogshead Cask. Non-chill filtered, no color added.

Caperdonich distillery started its life in 1898 under the (relatively uninspiring) name 'Glen Grant #2'. Caperdonich distillery was founded by J. & J. Grant, the people that also built the 'original' Glen Grant distillery in 1840. Glen Grant Number Two remained inactive for six decades, but in the year 1965 it was rebuilt by Glenlivet Distilleries Ltd. who resumed production. The new owners also changed the name to Caperdonich ("Secret Well"). In 1977 Seagram from Canada acquired Caperdonich distillery - before selling it on to Pernod Ricard in 2001. Pernod Ricard closed the distillery one year later in 2002.

Fragrant nose, of cut damp grass/ hay, lemon, tropical fruit, malt. Taste is very sweet and creamy. Vanilla custard, canned mixed fruit, sugary syrup. Finishes sweet and spicy. chili, paprika, orange zest. 1oz-34 2oz-64

Littlemill (Hart Brothers) 20yr.

Lowland, Distilled 1984, bottled 2004. Matured in Oakwood Casks. Non-chill filtered, no color added

Littlemill distillery was a Scottish malt whisky distillery in Bowling, West Dunbartonshire. Situated on the border of Lowlands and Highlands, its products were generally classified as lowlands whisky. The distillery finally closed in 1994 after changing ownership several times, and was destroyed in a fire in 2004.

Opens with saccharine sweetness that carries through all the way to the back, quickly joined by grass clippings and a touch of citrus oil, with some bourbon cask notes hiding in the background. 1oz-25 2oz-46

Rare Ayrshire (Signatory) 37yr.

Lowlands, 48.5%. Matured in A Bourbon Barrel. Non-chill filtered, no color added.

Ayrshire is the code name used by several NDPs for the Ladyburn distillery that was closed in 1975 by William Grant & Sons. WG&S does continue to put out rare releases of this wonderful old whisky (some bottles priced at $2000), but won't allow anyone but themselves to actually use the name Ladyburn.

The nose starts with some funky, woody and fruity notes which develop into grassy malt, toasted nuts and a charred sweetness like burned marshmallows and some earthy undertones. A nice layer of honeyed sweetness moves through the palate, along with some wood and a nutty overtone. In the background are some darker earthier notes. The finish fades out wood and fruit heavy at a medium pace with some trailing notes of nuts and cumin. 1oz-52 2oz-91

Imperial (Duncan Taylor) 17yr.

Speyside, Distilled 1995, bottled 2012, 53.2%. Matured in Oak Casks. Non-chill filtered, no color added.

Imperial was dogged by poor timing. Its chequered history meant that it never had a chance to become established as a single malt brand. Too late for the very earliest wave, by the time the category was becoming popular in the 1970s it was already committed to supplying fillings. When the single malt market came of age in the early 1990s, Imperial was closed.

Nose of olive, burnt orange zest, oak, and vanilla notes. A creamy palate with fruit and toasted grain. Finishes creamy and bright with touches of ginger and baking spice. 1oz-38 2oz-70
